UNDERSTANDING THE IMPACT OF HOSPITAL MEAL ORDERING SYSTEM ON PATIENT MEAL CONSUMPTION IN PRIVATE HOSPITALS AROUND THE GLOBE.

□ Mr. Saurav Chhabra*
Prof. Dr. Garima Parkash

ABSTRACT

Malnutrition in patients admitted at private hospitals can be combatted with the help of nourished meals, which in turn will increase the meal consumption rate and aids in speedy Patient's speedy recovery. Most hospitals in India especially private hospitals have a fixed cyclic menu for general ward patients and offer very limited meal choices as they focus more on patient's treatment and medical procedures rather than provision of meals and most important providing meals based on patient's preferences and likings. The result is lower meal consumption rate in private hospitals of Delhi. A positive shift has been seen lately in the hospital Administration, with the increase in the amount of research on the role of nutritional food and its positive impact on patient's overall well-being and recovery. Hospitals now give equal emphasis (if not more) to the Meal Production, Variety and delivery system. The Research provides an insight to the role of Patient Centric meal ordering system in improving patient's meal intake. The aim of the research is to list down an Alternate way i.e. through Room service type meal ordering system where the patient's have a flexibility to choose food items of their choice taking into consideration their Health status and medical restrictions. With the Concept of E-Menus followed by most of the known private hospitals outside India. A shift in the thought process of Hospital administration is the need of the hour. Collaborative innovative methods are required to improve patient's nutritional Intake besides set meals addressed as so-called balanced meals or therapeutic meals that lacks in Texture, Eye appeal and other meal related attributes.

Introduction

Optimal nutritional management and proper patient care becomes very important to avoid clinical issues in patients. Use of advance technology specially in hospitals outside India such as electronic medical records, electronic medication management, and other Wellbeing organizations, institutions & Medicinal information technology and advancements have played a key role in improving patient wellbeing, Food Hygiene, safety and clinical decision making in hospitals. (Prgomet et al, 2017 & Georgiou et al, 2011). One of the serious issues hospitals face today is Malnutrition. It is often associated with prolong hospital stay, readmissions, increased hospital infection and even higher mortality rates (Correia & Waitzberg, 2003). Electronic meal ordering systems (EMO) benefits the patient by enhancing efficiency of food service, monitoring of nutritional content, including fluid intake for individual patient and hence helps in identifying malnutrition in patients (Conrick, 2011 & Skouroliaou et al, 2009).

Review of Literature

Presence of chronic disease may impact patient's dietary intake (Pennington, 1998 and Akner & Cederholm, 2001). This may be further influenced by interruptions in meal timings (porter at al, 2015). Furthermore poor consumption can also result from the
