COVID-19: A CASE STUDY OF CRISIS COMMUNICATION OF FOUR WORLD LEADERS

Dr. Indu Prabha Pathak

Assistant Professor Sushant University
Gurgaon Haryana

Abstract

The paper aims to study the communication style of four world leaders amidst the crisis situation of Covid-19 pandemic. The paper delineates the theories of Arjen Bojn, Herslot and Mayfield's leadership communication and proposes that some of the vital attributes of effective leadership communication are appropriate medium of communication, direction, creating a sense of purpose, clarity, truthfulness and empathy. This has been further argued by analysing the messages of four world leaders during corona crisis situation.

The analysis of speeches and communication reflects how effective leadership communication during testing times can bring a positive impact in the mindset and the lack of it results in chaos, confusion and marring the communication process.

Keywords: Leadership communication, crisis communication, mixed messages, truthful communication.

Declaration: I do hereby acknowledge that the research paper titled "Covid-19: A Case study of Crisis Communication of Four World Leaders" is my own and original work. It has not been published before either in full or part and is not currently under consideration for publication elsewhere and the articles/research paper contain no unlawful statements and it is no way surpasses of the rights of others nor breach of any law.

Introduction

The most vital components of crisis communication Analysis of crisis communication of four world leaders Conclusion References

The novel Corona Virus, the global pandemic situation and the biggest threat for humankind triggered off some pertinent questions. The role of effective communication becomes even greater especially in times of great uncertainty, complicated challenges and no easy answers. In such vulnerable times the leader's communication, his words and actions have the potential to reduce the stress, anxiety, help people adjust with the manifold developments and cope with the new normal. The clear and transparent communication coupled with empathy and truthfulness can bring hope and reassurance to people and prepare them better to make sense of the situation. In some cases, it turns crisis in to a catalyst of positive changes. The aim of this study is to examine the role of communication by four world leaders under dynamic situations and how it impacted the lives of the people and collective psyche of their nation. The case study also deliberates upon components which are life and blood for the effective leadership. It attempts to dissect the speeches of these world leaders and how it may have favourably or adversely impacted people of their respective countries.

Vital components of crisis communication

Crisis situation calls for a special ability to demonstrate competence. Empathy coupled with vision and adaptive planning is vital to act on the face of fast-moving changes and events fraught with risk and uncertainty.

Inspired by being alive, here is a journey to not the end of the world but to another world that exists within us. A world made up of hopes, dreams, fear, love, hate and the diverse ingredients crucial to survival in this universe. The words in this book are an amalgamation of the thoughts that cross our minds in reality or the illusionistic realm that we harbor, primarily in our subconscious minds. We are all humans, living our lives like a pendulum- oscillating between the good and the bad, the happy and the sad, the light and the dark. At the end of the day, it is all about exploring, evolving, and embracing life and ourselves, in no given order as such and this book is proof of that.

ABSTRACT

Purpose: The main objective of this study is to develop an empirically validated scale so that it is easier to measure the perception of students in respect of quality of services they are getting in B-Schools. Design/methodology/approach: A 27 item questionnaire on service quality in B-school was developed and tested for reliability and validity using both exploratory and confirmatory factor analyses. SPSS 19 and AMOS 20 were used for exploratory and confirmatory factor analysis. The data was collected from MBA and BBA students of different B-schools in Delhi NCR. Findings: The study identified six factors namely Reliability, Physical evidence, Development, Competence, Responsiveness and Delivery as the key dimensions of service quality for B-School. Originality/value: This scale can be a great help for the industry to set up new benchmarks in the course development, academic industry interface, effective training and above all placements. Since different dimensions have been found in this research each dimension can be taken as yardstick for the overall enhancement in the quality of a B-School.

Keywords: Service quality, B-School, Scale Development, Education, BSCQUAL.

INTRODUCTION

Education is a significant institution given the shift to a knowledge economy. Scholars Malarvizhi; et al (2014) studies about service sector and also states that the fastest growing sector in today's era is the service sector and there is a shift for the countries from producing to services: They stated that rendering pure services are done by educational institutes by delivering a platform for higher education which involves various features of a service. Gruber et al. (2010) study various features that higher education has in respect to delivering their services that is heterogeneous, intangible and perishable. In today's world the standardization for higher education becomes very difficult as experience in service sector differs from one situation to other situation and thus results in making services difficult to standardize. Therefore; the perishability criterion is satisfied because it is difficult to store higher education. But now because of digitalization this is also not difficult and the situation can be overcome, for instance, the emergence of and video conferencing technologies and internet based learning (Cuthbert, 1996a). With advancement in technology and because of various innovations the perishable feature can be overcome. The fastest growing industry these days is higher education which results in placing greater emphasis in meeting all the needs and various expectations of their customers and here the customers are the students. The literature and various studies reveal that in education sector the service quality is considerably found still undeveloped. Therefore, many efforts have been made on commercial services (Sultan & Wong, 2010). Oldfield & Baron, 2000 states earlier all institutions that provides higher education in education sector are not considered as "profit-

Abstract:

The epidemic of Covid 19 in the world affects most of the countries. The majority of countries are affected by a lack of social movement among the people. The economic factors of the population affected the worst. In India, the lockdown period whole economic factors are stumbled due to Closure of all economic Factors. The service sector mainly the Education system remained closed for a few Month. After the relaxation of the lockdown by the government, the education system has planned its teaching by transfer from the conventional system to digital learning that is online learning. But the Online learning has to Create a number of drawbacks in the outreach of education to the students. This paper has revealed the perception of the student among the online learning which the student has studied their online courses and attending their class.

INTRODUCTION

The COVID 19 has disrupted the lifestyle of people all over the world. The pandemic has already, and rapidly, been catastrophic to the global economy(Nandal, Nandal, & Anuradha, 2020).Education is intended to make one's life more civilised, cultured, and democratic(Nandal, Nandal, & Kataria, A Secondary School Study Of Family Environment, 2021).The education in the world and also in India have changed their system of education to an online system due to pandemics of disease. The Online system called online learning is classes are conducted through the online mode using the internet. However, online learning is just one type of "distance learning" - the umbrella term for any learning that takes place across distance and not in a traditional classroom. Online education is the internet supported platform the teacher and student are interact using the various platform like Google meet, Zoom and go to a meeting. The teachers taking the classes on this platform to the student. Apart

This textbook is intended to raise awareness of a number of environmental issues. It inculcates in society a pro-environmental mindset and a behavioral pattern focused on living a sustainable lifestyle. A textbook, on the other hand, is unlikely to result in a complete shift in society's behavior. Conservation is best accomplished by instilling a passion for natural world. A new conservation ethic will emerge if every college student is exposed to the wonders of Indian wilderness.

Abstract

The aim of the current study is to determine the impact of covid-19 on anxiety levels of college students. Researchers have shown that increased anxiety due to the fear of covid-19 had lowered the academic performance of college students. The data is collected with the help of Generalized Anxiety Disorder Scale (GAD-7) from the sample. GAD-7 scale is used to determine the anxiety levels of the sample. Sample size is 181 (78 males and 103 females) in the age group of 17-23. Data is collected with the help of questionnaire from the students studying in private colleges of Gurugram. Students were also asked to rate their overall experience during covid-19 lockdown. 57.1% of participants have high levels of anxiety and the remaining 41.3% of the participants have low levels of anxiety. Correlation between the anxiety levels and experience during covid-19 lockdown was computed with the help of Pearson correlation. Results have shown that there exists a negative correlation between the experience during covid-19 lockdown and anxiety levels of students. The correlation was highly significant at 99% of confidence level. After that, significance testing was done and paired t-test was applied so as to compare high anxiety (moderate and severe symptoms) scores with the scores of low anxiety (minimal and mild symptoms). Value of t that is 20.708 is highly significant at 99% level of confidence ( $p < .001$ ).

ABSTRACT

Livability is a fundamental guiding concept for urban planning and governance, and its definition and evaluation have become a focus of research. The term 'livability' is mostly centred on phrases such as 'Quality of Life,' 'Well-being,' and 'Life satisfaction'. It was invented and widely used to refer to a complete, systematic strategy for reversing elements of twentieth-century urban planning techniques; yet the concept maintains its ambiguity. This research paper attempts to provide a clear explanation of this term by looking at various studies and approaches used for analysing cities in terms of livability. The paper also identifies various models for measuring livability and recommends a model that could be used to measure the livability index of community.

Introduction

Livability refers to the condition of living environment that provides inhabitants with an adequate quality of life (Pandey, et al., 2013)(Lukumanab, et al., 2017). It is a place-based notion where a simple daily characteristic may have a tremendous influence on the wellbeing/happiness of a person, his family, and the community. Livability measures how effectively a city's-built environment or services meet citizens' needs and aspirations(Kamp, et al., 2003). Livability is a behaviour-related function of the combination of environmental and human variables (Gough, 2015). It is also a very subjective term: what is considered a livable community in one place may be despised in another. Cultures and lifestyles change expectations for urban design, transportation, and other infrastructure, as well as service provision. Nonetheless, livability is a compelling concept.

The concept of livability represents overall quality of life and wellbeing, wherein the attributes of the place helps in meeting the economic, social, cultural needs of the residents of a place, promoting their health and well-being while protecting the resources and the ecosystem (Council, 2002)(Badland, et al., 2014).

History

The growing amounts of environmental design research in the 1950s and 1960s laid the foundations for livability design. Campaigners like Jane Jacobs and William Whyte launched the neighbourhood preservation movement in the 1950s to protect dense, mixed-use urban communities. Affordability, accessibility, control efficiency, and equity were all identified as livability by Kevin Lynch (1960). To develop a framework for analysing urban livability, Lynch (1981) proposed the "Good City Form" idea (Patil & Patil, 2016). In the 1970s, the US and Europe started studying methods to improve urban livability by

Abstract

The urban environment is a product of many factors for communities, involving activities, spaces, and users of different age groups. Stakeholder consultation has become an essential part of envisaging any urban space. In most cases, even when the concerns are related to children, adults tend to weigh in more with their ideas and comments than do children. A global movement called Child-friendly City seeks to emphasize children's rights as members of urban society. The city is said to need to be aware of this migration. The inclusion of children to be respected, treated, and accepted in the metropolitan community without prejudice is urgently needed, in addition to providing a safe, healthy and sustainable environment for child development. The neighborhood is the first area where kids are exposed to the social world since it is the smallest unit of the spatial environment.

Urban playgrounds and schools are simply a small part of a child's environment. pathways that are safe and enjoyable for kids' daily mobility. Children are easy targets for people looking to create commotion and disturbance in shared settings. We must establish a specific approach that involves interacting with kids and seeing how they organize their playing activities. Children can manage danger in a physically demanding environment.

The research aims to consider that In this increasingly urbanizing era with a harsher environment and the highest level of urban expansion, children cannot be disregarded anymore.

Keywords: Child Friendly, Helping Neighborhood, Child Psychology.

INTRODUCTION

Urbanization has an impact on everyone, but children especially. Children's freedom of movement has been restricted by urbanization, and they are typically driven to locations like schools or kept indoors under adult supervision. User viewpoints are crucial for making a space feel welcoming and responsive, however, when establishing a child-friendly setting, we notice a lack of children's opinions and engagement in the dialogue process.

For better employment opportunities and living conditions, people from one region move to other cities, enlarging the urban periphery areas and luring development and urban transformation. This development is primarily motivated by the interests of adults and private developers and may not necessarily be related to the requirements of the children.
