School of Design

SOD/18/Feb/2023

Date-08-Feb-2023

Dear Sir,

The School of Design has proposed to organise an educational trip to KMUTT Thailand for its students from 24th Feb. 2023 To 4th Mar. 2023 (9 days 8 night).

Students of B.Des 2nd and 3rd year will be part of this trip. Students will be participating in the Design workshop & learning along with students from KMUTT. The objective of this visit is to provide students experience to exposure about the cross culture Design workshop.

The travel cost of the trip will be borne by students. Staying and workshop cost will be borne by KMUTT. Itinerary and student list is attached for your reference. 15 students have registered for the trip (Student Details attached)

Necessary protocols regarding undertaking forms would be ensured. Written consent of parents will be taken before the trip. (Format attached). Complete itinerary Coordinator/Faculty details will be shared with the parents. Reports will be submitted after the trip along with attendance & photographs.

Faculty accompanying the students are Dr. Sachin Datt and Ms. Anjali Marwah. They will be applying on duty leave during the specified days.

15 students from KMUTT along with their 2 faculty would be visiting SU Campus in the first week of April 2023 for 5 days for design workshop, the similar financial reciprocal arrangement is proposed/offered by SU (Stay of students & faculty in the hostel along with food and workshop cost). Proposed cost shared below.

The KMUTT Workshop - Detailed Budget - (3 April - 8 April 2023)

15 students and 2 faculty from KMUTT would be coming to Sushant University Campus

(57) Abstract

The present invention relates to a neonatal fitness patch (100). The neonatal fitness patch (100) comprises a plurality of sensors (102), a soothe unit (104), a central processing unit (108), a display unit (110) and a power unit (112). The plurality of sensors (102) is configured to detect the health related information of the neonatal. The neonatal fitness patch (100) is applied on the wrist of a newborn baby measures accurately the heart rate, movement, sleep, blood oxygen levels and even soothes the baby automatically by playing soft music when the sensor detects that the baby is crying. The present invention provides a neonatal fitness patch (100) that can monitor the baby health in real-time [Figure 1]

Abstract: This study purposes to examine the antecedents of luxury fine dining restaurant patrons' willingness to pay a price premium in Delhi. It categorized the degree of consumerist behaviours concerning the luxury food consumption and examined the influence of relational and individual effects in the patronage of luxury fine dining restaurants. A theoretical model is proposed which explained the effects of the representative indicator of luxury service consumption. Variables like bandwagon effect, hedonic effect and snob effect were found to be influencing the esteem-based food consumption. Gastronomic engrossment and acquaintance were projected to elucidate patrons' willingness to pay price premiums for luxury fine-dining restaurant experience. In total 369 usable responses were subjected to thorough structural equation modelling analysis. Results showed that gastronomic engrossment had highest score in terms of total variance explained and explanatory power of willingness to pay price premium was found to be strongest compared to the other constructs.

Keywords: Fine dining restaurants, Luxury, Price premium, Gastronomy

INTRODUCTION

Luxuries are considered as 'things of pleasure and gratification', which provides material or physical satisfactions, and are frequently linked with material or perceptible contentment (Hayden, 2003). Luxury items or products may also be thought of as the possessions that tender happiness and pleasure and are distinguished by a qualitative enhancement of fundamental product as they usually represent an indulgence (Batat et al., 2019; Miracle, 2002). Luxury fine-dining restaurants are frequently regarded as high-end top notch food serving places, not only concerning the price but also with respect to the quality of food and beverages, inclusive theme, beautification, fashion, décor, cuisine, artisan skills and a probable amalgamation of all these elements and attributes (Hwang and Hyun, 2012; Lane, 2010). In the earlier research many scholars have considered the products or items to be luxury when the staff skills, craftsmanship and eminence are at the utmost echelon (Ottenbacher and Harrington, 2007; Sthapit, 2017; Tsai, 2016). In the similar lines, luxury fine dining restaurants have been recognized to provide contemporary, innovative, and stylish menus that shove past the patrons' involvements outside the norm (Kiatkawsin and Han, 2019), costly as compared to the non-luxury restaurants (O'cass and Frost, 2002; O'Cass and Choy, 2008), not patronized frequently (Kim et al., 2006), and presented societal status as well as eloquence standards when consumed amongst others. Researchers have constantly used the expressions like "luxury" and "fine dining" to depict the restaurant's operation of this high level (Han and Jeong, 2013; Kim et al., 2006). However, Current study encourages a better knowledge of the link between luxury dining establishments and consumers, as well as how customers are most willing to use the luxury status of these establishments in their life and the prestige that comes from exhibiting oneself through brands.

RECYCLING SIGNIFICANCE OF WASTE MANAGEMENT

¹Antima Pathak, ²Ishani Garg

^{1,2} Department of Planning, Sushant University

Abstract - As a result of urbanization and rapid population growth solid waste generation is rising at a pace which makes it difficult to manage the waste produced. Risks of improper waste management has drawn great attention of public and policy makers and has forced them to come up with the new policies for dealing with accumulation of waste. Improper waste management has great impact on environment and public health hence one should follow proper measures and norms for waste disposal which has been suggested by the experts. Proper management of waste is important for building sustainable and livable environment, but it remains a challenge for many developing countries and cities. An appropriate technology that is environmentally friendly, socially acceptable, and economically accessible can fulfill the society demands of sustainable waste management.

This paper overviews the waste management along with the recycling of waste and the responses of the government to address various problems brought about by improper waste management. It also reviews the policies related to waste management including the latest the most comprehensive solid waste management policy in the country. It focuses on the implementation of these policies and the recent initiatives and activities to promote proper waste management and recycling. Using the experiences of some selected case studies, the potentials and benefits of recycling both has been addressed related to the waste management problems.

Key Words: Recycling, Urbanization, Sustainable Waste, Management, Policies, Environment Friendly

1. INTRODUCTION

Solid waste management (SWM) is a problem in both developed and developing nations around the world. People are consistently producing solid waste via their regular activities. As global population increases the generation of solid waste increases as well, particularly in cities. There were 2.9 billion urban residents in the world in 2000 and is anticipated to reach 5 billion 2030, that will cause a faster rate of solid waste production. Managing this enormous amount of waste effectively is very crucial. Poor solid waste management brings with it serious health and environmental problems. Piles of uncollected solid waste accumulated in open spaces and streets are major contributors to health problems and environmental degradation. These wastes generally add greatly to water pollution as when it rains, much of this waste ends up being swept into water bodies with the surface runoff. According to the World Health Organization, more than five million deaths worldwide are caused each year by waterborne and water-related diseases (UN). In order to minimize risk to the environment and human health, solid waste must be properly managed, which includes proper storage, collection, transportation, treatment, and disposal. In industrialized nations, Workable regulations are now in place, and the justifications for waste collection and disposal are widely understood and accepted. The lack of land available for sanitary landfills is the other issue that developed nations must deal with. Since the landfill technique is very popular and widely used in developed countries to dispose of municipal solid waste, it requires a sizable operating area as well as the right technology to minimize environmental pollution. (kassim, 2012)

1.1 LITERATURE REVIEW

Sustainable waste management aims to reduce the amount of solid waste that is disposed of in the landfills or through incineration. Materials are kept in use for as long as possible. To help lessen the detrimental environmental, social, and economic effects of 21st-century consumption, a more thorough approach towards sustainable waste management must focus on the entire lifecycle of a product. This is because of the fact that in our current linear economy, waste production starts even before the products are manufactured. (Ariva Sugandi Permana a, 2015)

1.2 CONCEPT

Sustainable waste management aims to produce the least amount of waste while consuming fewer natural resources and reusing as many natural resources as possible. It is our responsibility to do sustainable waste management for the sake of both our environment and future generations. A successful sustainable waste management system should include feedback loops, put an emphasis on processes, demonstrate adaptability, and divert waste from disposal. The circular economy which involves sharing, leasing, reusing, refurbishing and recycling of existing material as long as possible is central idea of sustainable waste management which presents numerous opportunities and advantages for the economy, society, and environment. Collecting, classifying, treating, recycling, and, when properly facilitated, supplying an energy and resource source are all components of sustainable waste

Abstract

Investors are confronted with plethora of investment alternatives, to make their money work for them, based upon desired risk and return availability. An investment portfolio is a manifest of individual's investment behaviour towards various investment avenues. At this junction of Coronavirus pandemic, the financial portfolio has been acclimatized to maintain balance and profitability. Therefore, the study proposes to assess the influence of socio-economic profile during these turbulent times on the investor's awareness, motivation, risk bearing capacity and attitude towards risk and non-risk mapped financial instruments. A structured questionnaire was administered to a sample of 168 Indian investors using convenience sampling technique and parametric & non-parametric statistics was used for delineating the influence of infodemic on behavioural finance. With worries about a potential stagflation growing, the investors focussed on liquidity instead of growth and invested more in debt or income schemes.

INTRODUCTION:

Since 2019 human race has been continuously struggling with a life threatening pandemic disease named COVID 19 caused by SARS-CoV-2 virus ((Kumar et al, 2021), first case of COVID 19 was reported on December 31, 2019 in Wuhan city, China (Kumar et al, 2020). The Covid-19 pandemic has abraded investor confidence, pulled down investment demand and contorted financial instruments. The healthcare cost has increased with decline in income results in shifting of investment paradigm depending upon economical frugality. To understand the investment propulsion in this pervasive pandemic towards true benchmark performance, we decided to work on survey-based indices instead of simulation models as many uncertainties are related to the disease and economic.

The main features of investments are security of principal amount, liquidity, income stability, approval and easy transferability (Manikandan and Muthumeenakshi, 2017). Behavioural portfolio theory (BPT) explains the portfolio design influenced by behavioural segmentation based on emotional competency and cognitive control (Senthamizhselvi and Vedantam, 2020). The socio-demographic characteristics segregate biased behaviour of investor towards market sentiment. The probability of selecting financial scheme among the wide range of traditional financial securities to non-security investment avenues allows the best fit financial inclusion in investor's overall portfolio allocation and decomposing the portfolio's return into a set of risk and non-risk mapped alternatives.

Ideally, choice of one investor should not affect the chance of another's preference as investment pivotal aspects differ by knowledge, surplus money, time, attitude and specific needs (Verma and Sahni, 2020). Generally, when a common man thinks about investment he will never go for any risky plan (Velmurugan et al., 2015). But fixed income products like FD, RD, NSC, KVP, MIS, PPF, SCSS, SSA etc. have been witnessed a rate cutting spree and market-based funds have changed monetary policies upside down which results in limited opportunities specially for conservative investors (Zhang et al., 2020). The prudent investment becomes a need not only for working adults or old-aged populace but to the millennials also under the guidance of fiduciaries so that the habit of consistent saving can be inculcated at the early age (Kumar et al., 2021).

In this study, the focus is on assessing the impact of demographical and sociological attributes such as age, gender, academic qualification, monthly income, marital status on investor's inclination to hold optimal returns with sustaining subsistence needs. The concept is strenuous to measure and time dependent (Bavel et al., 2020). The rest of the paper is structured as follows: Related works are discussed in Section 2 followed by the need of study in Section 3. In Section 4, research methodology is canvassed with hypotheses to test the significance of the attributes in assessing the impact of the

CHAPTER 11

IMPACT OF COVID -19 ON ECONOMY AND COMMERCE

Abstract

COVID -19 pandemic has been an event which has impacted almost the entire world. There have been in the history of mankind many such instances of epidemics or communicable diseases that has impacted large number of population like Spanish flu, black death, Asian flu, influenza pandemic etc but most of them been restricted to one or two continents/ restricted regions. By far, in terms of global impact, COVID-19 has been the worst because it has affected everyone on earth. While availability of better medical facilities/ timely vaccines the spread has been controlled or may have not led to as many deaths as in earlier pandemics but the fear or danger of pandemic is far from over. This pandemic has not only impacted our lives socially but has far reaching impact on global economy and trade and commerce. This article will analyse factors, quantum of impact and some of the remedies and actions that has led to recovery of economy over last 18-24 months.

By far WHO since its founding in 1948, has only declared three pandemics – which means when a disease spread across more than two continents. COVID-19, which began in Dec 2019 in China spread across the globe thanks to global mobility and was declared a pandemic in March 2020. Due to globalization and interconnected economies through trade and complex supply chain networks spread across the globe, the impact has been very widespread and hence been detrimental to the global economy.

Abstract

FABRICATION AND EVALUATION OF EXTENDED-RELEASE BEADS USING ANTI-INFLAMMATORY DRUG

Anwar Khan*, Rizwanul Hasan, Rupa Gupta, Md Faheem Haider

ABSTRACT

The present study was focused on optimization of the formulation for the extended-release capsule of mesalamine. Multi particulate system has long been employed to improve the bioavailability of drugs. Mesalamine pellets were prepared by Coating drug solution on sugar sphere followed by functional coating. The release pattern depends upon the pore formation on the outer surface of the unit particle or beads and then slowly and steadily releasing drugs from the inner core. Ethocel grade 7cps was used as a release controlling polymer with the aid of hydrophilic polymer HPMC E5 with pore former to work as a controlled drug delivery system. The functional coated Pellets were used for various parameters like assay and in-vitro dissolution profile. The study confirmed that mesalamine can deliver its effect into lower part of intestine. The finally prepared pellets were used for the treatment of IBD (Ulcerative colitis) Batch 2 had gave optimised result which follow the US specification. Kinetics was applied to the optimized Batch B-2 which was following Higuchi matrix and the mechanism of release was diffusion as the polymer used was HPMC E5 and Tri ethyl citrate –pore former and Ethocel- impenetrable barrier.

Keywords: Mesalamine, in-vitro, Kinetics, Ulcerative colitis, hydrophilic polymer.

An Appraisal of Vernacular Architecture of Bikaner: Climatic Responsiveness and Thermal Comfort of Havelis

Abstract

The building sector is a significant energy-consuming sector. Sustainable and climate-responsive architecture offers possible solutions to these challenges. The principles evolved over many generations as observed in the vernacular architecture, constructed with locally available materials applying the local construction techniques and confined to the traditional knowledge system are more responsive to the climate than the newly built contemporary houses. This however is unexplored with scientific methods.

This research does so by exploring vernacular haveli and the contemporary house within the walled city of Bikaner. The vernacular havelis of Bikaner, a town in India's desert region are climate responsive. They have evolved from centuries of experience and observations of climate and Nature. The research looks at the Vernacular havelis of Bikaner, which is in use and also shares the same scale and location with the contemporary house. The thermal performance along with other parameters of the two housing types are compared in the two climatic extremes i.e. summer and winter. The comparison is done by physical data logging and in the adaptive behavior analysis of the users of the two. The research looks at the qualitative and quantitative evaluation of the vernacular haveli and the contemporary house in Bikaner. The process involved an experimental setup. The findings show a preference for traditional houses over contemporary houses in terms of thermal comfort

Keywords: Climate responsive; Thermal comfort; Vernacular architecture; Havelis; Bikaner; India.

Introduction

The natural and passive systems in buildings use non-mechanical methods to maintain a comfortable indoor temperature and are a key factor in mitigating the impact of buildings on the environment. The traditional architecture of the past is the best pointer in this regard and constitutes outstanding evidence of being climate-responsive and energy conscious. They display years of embodied experience built on the relationship between building and climate, implying a logical analysis, the consideration of appropriate principles, and rational use of resources (Kamal, 2007). The climate-sensitive nature of sustainable design, as well as its awareness of regional environmental and material concerns, demand a fresh look at the issue of traditional architecture as it pertains to the practice of sustainable building. The inherent and timeless knowledge of traditional architecture remains key to the future of responsible design and planning, providing an important foundation of design initiatives that will inspire eco-technological advancements that might one day alleviate our reliance upon energy abusive

Cities are exposed to many security threats in urban areas due to crime, violence, insecurity of tenure and forced eviction, and also natural and human-made disasters in the city. Cities have witnessed many challenges and the problems such as increasing population numbers, housing density, migration to cities, unemployment, poverty, deteriorating infrastructure, unhealthy environment, wars, terrorism and political conflicts which create an unhealthy environment among the city. So the purpose of this study is to define and introduce the concept of the safe city to create a liveable healthy environment in the city and also describe the most important planning and design elements that reduce the opportunities for crime in the city like the street planning, land use, building density and role of management and good governance in addition to urban planning concepts like the defensible space, territoriality, access control, surveillance, target hardening, building Image, activity support, and maintenance. This fast tread urbanization is pressurizing the existing core infrastructure & public amenities and leading to competition over scarce resources in the cities and lies the concept of the safe city respect factors such as comprehensive planning, designing and accessibility for better city development.

Keywords: Disaster, Crime, Safety, Design & Accessibility.

INTRODUCTION

Public safety is an important field of concern in cities across the world. The safety of the public directly affects the liveability index of the city. The three pillars of safe cities include Building urban safety through urban vulnerability reduction and building urban safety through urban planning, management and governance. Thirdly through improving the governance of the safety within the city. Crime, violence and fear are the challenges within the city which affect the overall development of the city. The combination of security risks and crime that occurs in metropolitan areas causes the public increases government concern and alienates investors. Security threats rise in large cities. There are physical and social variables that must be taken into account to lessen security concerns and the crime rate. Poverty, unemployment, and people's quality of life are all influenced by social issues. On the other hand, environmental variables include urban planning and design aspects. Street planning, land use, and building density, as well as public space, building height, street design, the hierarchy of spaces, layout, and orientation of buildings, and location of entrances and balconies, are physical factors that have an impact on crime rates in urban planning. (BEN WELLE, 2013)

The lack of room, shelter, food and other necessities for the growing population is a sign of the imbalance of the resources available, which breeds conflict, rivalry, and ultimately insecurity. The surge in crime in cities is the most horrifying and obvious indication of this insecurity. Safety can apply to a person's ability to make decisions that they believe are best for their well-being as well as to physical protection, which is just one way to conceive of it. For people to have choices in their lives, safety is a prerequisite. When there is violence, crime, terror, and uncertainty in the world, as well as when social services like health and education are poor, absent, or impossible to access, people's options in life are drastically curtailed. When a variety of opportunities and means of service delivery are lacking, physical safety levels are nearly always lower.
